

Andrew Scheps

Andrew Scheps has engineered and mixed some of the biggest rock bands in the world: Green Day, Red Hot Chili Peppers, Weezer, Audioslave, Black Sabbath, Metallica, Linkin Park, Hozier, Kaleo and U2. He's worked with legends such as Johnny Cash, Neil Diamond and Iggy Pop, as well as country artists such as Zac Brown Band, Natalie Maines, Chase Rice and Ruston Kelly. In addition, he continues to work with indie artists such as My Brightest Diamond, Motorpsycho, Rancid, Manu Chao, Tinariwen, Farao, CRX, Cass McCombs and Blood Red Shoes.

Andrew has been awarded three Grammys for his work with Adele, Red Hot Chili Peppers and Ziggy Marley, and his work has garnered over 20 nominations in categories such as Best Rock Song, Best Rock Album and Best Hard Rock Performance. In addition, Andrew received the International Engineer of the Year Award by the UK's Music Producers Guild, an Honorary Doctorate from Bucks New University and was named a Companion of the Liverpool Institute for Performing Arts by Sir Paul McCartney.

Though starting out as a musician, Andrew found that what he enjoyed most was working behind the scenes. He toured with Stevie Wonder (as a keyboard tech) and Michael Jackson (mixing live sound), but he found his home in the studio, and honed his craft working for producers such as Rob Cavallo, Don Was and Rick Rubin. In addition to recording and mixing for these icons, he took on the role of producer with bands such as Favez, Gogol Bordello, The Duke Spirit, Low Roar and others.

For a time, Andrew also started and ran Tonequake Records, a boutique indie label with acts including Low Roar as well as Favez, Act Rights, Heidi Happy, Twenty Two Hundred and others.

After 25 years in Los Angeles, Andrew relocated to the UK in July 2015 where he set up his own mix room (Punkerpad UK) as well as partnering with Monnow Valley Studios -- putting his Neve 8068 MKII and extensive collection of outboard gear, microphones and instruments into one of the best sounding recording rooms in the UK.
